

Keely Heard From Again.

Editor New York Sun—I have been identified with the work of Mr. Keely for over seventeen years, and have visited him in his laboratory perhaps fifty times, and have seen the progress of his work up to this time.

He has now completed his vibratory circuit of force, and will soon show the wonderful 250 horse power commercial engine now completed and which is now being set up in his shop.

The late celebrated Prof. Leidy, member of the National Academy of Sciences and President of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, informed me that "Mr. Keely's discoveries would astound the scientific world, and the great worth of them could not be estimated."

Mr. Keely claims that the all-important connection has been completed, with the result that he has gained command of an accumulation of countless force drawn from the atmosphere, or as he expresses it, "a sympathetic force of out-reach representing in the full receptive circuit an accumulation of polar sympathy of more than twenty-three tons when under rotation to be distributed to the polar and dipolar circuits" of his machine.

In a long article recently published it was stated by eminent electricians "that polar currents of great force have been discovered, if we knew how to utilize them, of value." Mr. Keely made this same statement years ago and was laughed at. He has now harnessed these polar currents for commercial use.

These polar currents from the foundation, as it were, of his discoveries. His provisional engine, perfected some few months ago, ran continuously, the big wheel showing perfection of rotary motion.

Next month a number of scientific and business British gentlemen will be here to visit Mr. Keely.

New York, March 26.

GEORGE H. PEARSON.
